

CULTURED

January 10, 2024

Here Are the 11 Must-See Exhibitions Opening in New York This January

The city is starting the year off strong with a myriad of exhibitions by artists including Joan Snyder, Raphaela Vogel, and Thomas Hirschhorn.

Brian Buczak, Untitled (Figure on Blue, Red Symbol, Man with Knife), 1982. Image courtesy of the artist and Ortuzar Projects.

“Man Looks at the World” by Brian Buczak

Through February 17

Ortuzar Projects and Gordon Robichaux

Two galleries with expertise in recontextualizing artists who have been overlooked by the establishment are teaming up to mount the first solo exhibition of the late Brian Buczak since 1989. The artist, who died in 1987 of AIDS-related complications, befriended an older generation of Fluxus pioneers and created paintings that drew from unlikely sources ranging from childhood textbook illustrations to corporate logos.